"Underlying present advanced degree programs in the graduate schools is the firm belief that subject matter preparation is adequate preparation for teaching."

(Eble, 1972, p. 107)

"Simply presenting declarative knowledge to students is no guarantee that they will be able to use it to solve problems, write essays, or think critically about issues for which the knowledge is relevant."

(Kurfiss, 1988, p. 38)

Although there is a lot more talk about improving college teaching these days, only a minority of graduate programs offer courses or supervised training in college teaching. For those of us who have already earned our terminal degree, it is even less likely that we had the opportunity for such educational or training experiences. The only recourse has been and still is learning on the job.

Our graduate studies acquainted us with the important periodicals/journals in our subject matter area. But there is also a wealth of print resources to help college professors learn more about teaching, if not about teaching one's own academic field, at least about college teaching in general. We offer this list to help acquaint you with what is available. Although some of these publications may be familiar to you, we suspect that even veteran teachers will find new publications. The hope is that these periodicals/journals will help in your efforts to become more effective college teachers.

The periodicals/journals are listed in two sections. The first contains publications directed toward a specific academic field or fields. We have listed the fields alphabetically, followed by the name(s) of the publication(s). The second section contains an alphabetic list of publications concerned–if not exclusively, at least regularly–with college teaching in general. We have tried to make the list as comprehensive as possible, but have undoubtedly omitted some publications. For example, we have not attempted to include any of the worthwhile newsletters published on individual campuses.

Acknowledgment

We would like to thank all of the department heads and faculty who suggested these periodicals. We also express our special appreciation to the University of Michigan's National Center for Research to Improve Postsecondary Teaching and Learning, specifically Ryan and Martens (1989) Planning a College Course whose list of teaching periodicals stimulated us to develop an expanded list.
